What do people do all day? What did women and men do to make a living in early modern Europe, and what did their work mean? As this book shows, the meanings depended both on the worker and on the context. With an innovative analytic method that is yoked

to a specially-built database of source materials, this book revises many

received opinions

about the history of gender and work in Europe. The applied

verb-oriented method

finds the 'work verbs'

that appear

incidentally in a wide variety of early

modern sources and then analyzes the context in which they appear. By tying information technologies and computer-assisted analysis to the analytic powers - both quantitative and qualitative - of professional historians, the method gets much closer to a participatory and early modern

Europe. First, it

discusses the

problem of assessing

more accurately the

incidence, character
and division of work.

Second, it analyzes
the configurations of work and human difference. Third, it deals with the extent to which work

practices created
notions of difference - gender difference but also other forms of difference - and,
conversely, to what

different work practices contributed to notions of sameness and

Finally, it studies the impact of processes

on sources from

Sweden, the authors
show the importance of multiple

openness of early
modern households,

the significance of marriage and marital status, the gendered nature of specific tasks, and the ways in which state formation and commercialization were entangled in people's everyday lives.
