The black squirrel seems to be a melanic (dark) form of the eastern grey squirrel and is 'common' in certain parts of the United States and Canada. The mendelian genetics of coat colour are explained on her web pages : <http://blacksquirrelproject.org/node/7>. One possibility is that the black or melanic form is at a selective advantage in terms of maintenance of body temperature.

Black squirrels are a melanistic subgroup of squirrels with black coloration on their fur. The phenomenon occurs with several species of squirrels, although it is most frequent with the eastern gray squirrel and the fox squirrel. Black morphs of the eastern gray and fox squirrels are the result of an abnormal pigment gene. Several theories have surfaced as to why the black morph occurs, with some suggesting that the black morph is a selective advantage for squirrels inhabiting the northern ranges

However, if a black squirrel and a gray squirrel mate, it's possible that the offspring will be brownish-black in color if they inherit the mutated pigmentation gene from the black parent. Interestingly, it is possible for two black squirrels to have gray-colored babies, if both the black squirrels are brownish-black, meaning that they only have one copy of the mutated gene.
